Dana Romalis has been a board certified Family Medicine physician since 2004. She enjoys taking care of people throughout all phases of life. Special interests include teaching, collaborative care, preventative medicine, behavioral change, and reproductive and adolescent health. Since 2017, she has been a clinician educator with Stanford's department of primary care and population health. Her current clinical practice is at the Vaden student health center on campus.

She was born and raised in Vancouver, Canada, where she also attended medical school at the University of British Columbia. As an undergraduate at Brandeis University, she double majored in Neuroscience and Psychology, and was captain of the women’s varsity diving team. She did her residency at Montefiore Medical Center’s Residency Program of Social Medicine in the Bronx, NY.

Prior to joining Stanford’s primary care division in 2017, she was a primary care physician on Santa Clara Valley Medical Center's interdisciplinary Homeless Healthcare Program for 10 years. She is committed to comprehensive and compassionate care for all.

In her spare time, she enjoys spending time with her husband and 2 adult children, reading, hiking, and volunteering in her community.
