Bio

Ruth Adewuya is the Managing Director for the Center for Continuing Medical Education, where she is responsible for strategic planning and delivery of professional development courses, workshops, and initiatives. The office is responsible for a large number of continuing education activities for physicians and other health care providers at Stanford Medicine which is composed of the Stanford School of Medicine, Stanford Health Care and the Lucile Packard Children’s Hospital Stanford.

Previously, she worked as the Director of Learning and Development for the American College of Chest Physicians and served as the clinical lead for curriculum design and program development. Ms. Adewuya has extensive experience in the development, deployment, and facilitation of clinical medical education for healthcare providers as well pharmaceutical and medical device industry groups. She is an expert at incorporating new learning tools and strategies for adult education and working with key opinion leaders. Ms. Adewuya has leveraged her pharmacy and medical training into a proficiency across a variety of therapeutic areas coupled with educational design processes including needs assessment development, educational/performance gap identification, development of learning objects that ensure medical education programming is targeting the "right" audience in the "right" learning environment.

CURRENT ROLE AT STANFORD

Managing Director

Stanford Center for Continuing Medical Education