BIO

Erin Grady, MD, CCD, FACNM, FSNMMI is a nuclear medicine physician at Stanford Hospital and Clinics in Stanford, California. She serves as the Interim Division Chief of Nuclear Medicine and Molecular Imaging, Associate Chair of Education and Diversity, Equity and Inclusion, and is program director for the nuclear radiology and nuclear oncology fellowship programs, as well as a coach for the diagnostic radiology program. She is actively involved nationally in the Society of Nuclear Medicine and Molecular Imaging as a Director-at-Large on the SNMMI Board of Directors, and chair of the Government Relations Committee. She serves on the Nuclear Medicine Residency Review Committee for ACGME appeals panel member and assisted with milestone 1.0 development committee for Nuclear Medicine and 2.0 milestone revision committee for Nuclear Radiology at the ACGME. She has been involved in multiple guideline and appropriate use documents on topics related to thyroid cancer (NCCN panel), neuroendocrine tumors, bone scintigraphy, lung scintigraphy and more. In addition, she is a past chair of the American Board of Nuclear Medicine and past president of the American College of Nuclear Medicine. Her areas of research interest include quality, education, radiopharmaceutical therapy and finding answers to clinical questions that arise during the course of practice. She is passionate about education, nuclear medicine's future, collaboration across specialties, and is a staunch advocate for patients.
