BIO

Christian Figueroa is a native of Los Angeles County with a passion for political communications and public service.

His early career includes press and digital roles at the United States Senate, the Los Angeles Mayor's Office, the California Democratic Party, and frontline congressional campaigns, helping develop data-driven messaging strategies to reach audiences using traditional and new media methods.

As one of the youngest delegates to the 2024 Democratic National Convention, Christian gained firsthand experience working with earned media, speaking on-the-record to The New York Times, NPR, PBS, Los Angeles Times, CalMatters, KABC, KTLA, and Washington Examiner.

He is entering his fourth year as a history candidate at Stanford University and serves on the organizing committee of the California Democratic Party.
