

Joshua Gulab

Undergraduate, Economics

---

Bio

BIO

Joshua Gulab is an undergraduate from Guyana studying Economics at Stanford University, with interests in data science, sustainable development, finance, and public policy. His work spans youth mentorship, climate and development research, and international policy. He is currently a research assistant in Professor Erin Mordecai's lab, where he works on the economic analysis of dengue control in Costa Rica. He is also a King Center for Global Development Summer Research Fellow, working with the World Bank on projects related to South America and the Caribbean.