Stanford

Hyoryung Ann Lee

Affiliate, Peds/Developmental-Behavioral Pediatrics

Bio

BIO

Hyoryung Ann Lee, M.D., is a board-certified developmental and behavioral pediatrician at the Center for Developing Minds, where she brings her extensive expertise to address the complex needs of children and adolescents with developmental and behavioral challenges. Dr. Lee provides comprehensive care that integrates medical, psychological, and educational strategies to support the well-being of her patients and their families.

Dr. Lee completed her fellowship in developmental and behavioral pediatrics at New York University, where she managed a high volume of complex cases and honed her skills in interdisciplinary care. Her tenure at NYU Langone Health and Bellevue Hospital was marked by her deep commitment to advocating for equitable healthcare services and serving diverse patient populations, including those facing family turmoil, immigration barriers, poverty, and trauma.

Dr. Lee's educational journey is characterized by a global perspective, as she holds a B.S. from the University of British Columbia, Canada, and pursued her medical degree via the St. George's University KBT Scholars Program at locations across England, Grenada, Canada, and the United States. Her training in Grenada instilled in her the importance of compassion and efficacy in medicine. She is a board-certified pediatrician, completing her pediatric residency at the Brooklyn Hospital Center, an academic affiliate of Mount Sinai, with specialized training in developmental and behavioral pediatrics at NYU Langone.

In addition to her clinical work, Dr. Lee teaches and supervises Stanford Pediatric Residents, contributing to the next generation of pediatricians through mentorship and training in Developmental and Behavioral pediatrics.

Beyond her professional pursuits, Dr. Lee is an accomplished musician, proficient in playing the flute, piano, and singing. Her passion for music and her dedication to using her performances to support charitable causes reflect her deep commitment to enriching the lives of those around her.