Bio

Meredith is a 4th year PhD candidate in the Environmental Geophysics Group. She is interested in using near surface geophysical methods to address problems in groundwater characterization and management. Her current research focuses on the application of electrical resistivity tomography (ERT) for mapping and monitoring the distribution of salinities in coastal aquifers suffering from saltwater intrusion.