Bio

Kaye Storm joined Stanford University as the Director of the Office of Science Outreach in January 2008 and retired from that position at the end of 2019. Prior to that time, she was the founding Executive Director and later the Director of Special Projects at IgnitED, an educational nonprofit in the San Francisco Bay Area specializing in professional development for science, math, engineering and technology teachers. Kaye also served as Marketing Manager for the University College London and created engineering graduate fellowship and Japan research fellowship programs for the American Electronics Association. Kaye also taught high school in Santa Clara, California for eight years and helped establish the Girls’ Middle School in Palo Alto, California.

CURRENT ROLE AT STANFORD

Kaye assists the Office of Science Outreach to implement the NSF-funded Research Experience for Teachers (RET) Program at Stanford.
