Associate Professor of Epidemiology and Population Health and, by courtesy, of Statistics and of Medicine (Stanford Prevention Research Center)

Bio

Professor Baiocchi is a PhD statistician in Stanford University's Epidemiology and Population Health Department. He thinks a lot about behavioral interventions and how to rigorously evaluate if and how they work. Methodologically, his work focuses on creating statistically rigorous methods for causal inference that are transparent and easy to critique. He designed -- and was the principle investigator for -- two large randomized studies of interventions to prevent sexual assault in the settlements of Nairobi, Kenya.

Professor Baiocchi is an interventional statistician (i.e., grounded in both the creation and evaluation of interventions). The unifying idea in his research is that he brings rigorous, quantitative approaches to bear upon messy, real-world questions to better people's lives.

ACADEMIC APPOINTMENTS

- Associate Professor, Epidemiology and Population Health
- Associate Professor (By courtesy), Statistics
- Associate Professor (By courtesy), Medicine - Stanford Prevention Research Center
- Member, Bio-X
- Member, Wu Tsai Human Performance Alliance

PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION

- PhD, University of Pennsylvania , Statistics (2011)
- BA, Williams College , Mathematics (2003)

Research & Scholarship

PROJECTS

- Rape prevention intervention - Stanford University
- Anti-human trafficking
- Cardiothoracic surgery
- Causal inference methods
- Foundations of machine learning
- Anti-addiction interventions
- Causal inference with free text
