Laila Soudi
Clinical Research Coordinator 1, Psych/Major Laboratories and Clinical & Translational Neurosciences Incubator

Bio

Laila Soudi is a researcher in the Early Life Stress and Pediatric Anxiety Program (ELSPAP) currently examining the mental health of Syrian child refugees exposed to war and trauma. A native Syrian, Laila has been working extensively with refugee populations for years across Europe and the Middle East.

Current Role at Stanford
Global mental health researcher

Publications

Publications

- Facilitating mental health screening of war-torn populations using mobile applications. Social psychiatry and psychiatric epidemiology 2016: ?

- More than 250,000 in Eastern Aleppo could die after the next 20 days
  Soudi, L.
  Washington Post.
  2016

- The refugee crisis fills us with despair but it can be a chance for hope and kindness
  Soudi, L.
  The Guardian.
  2016

- The global community is failing to address mental health
  Soudi, L.
  The Guardian.
  2016