Bio

Laila Soudi is the project lead for the Stanford Refugee Research Project (SRRP), a project to explore how Stanford University can best engage to address the refugee crisis in the Middle East.

She is a former researcher in the Early Life Stress and Pediatric Anxiety Program (ELSPAP), having worked on better understanding the mental health of Syrian child refugees exposed to war and trauma. Laila has been extensive experience with refugee populations across Europe and the Middle East.

CURRENT ROLE AT STANFORD

Project Lead

Publications

PUBLICATIONS

- Facilitating mental health screening of war-torn populations using mobile applications. Social psychiatry and psychiatric epidemiology 2016: -?

- More than 250,000 in Eastern Aleppo could die after the next 20 days
  Soudi, L.
  Washington Post.
  2016

- The refugee crisis fills us with despair but it can be a chance for hope and kindness
  Soudi, L.
  The Guardian.
  2016

- The global community is failing to address mental health
  Soudi, L.
  The Guardian.
  2016