BIO

Dr. Elizabeth Bailey is a Clinical Professor of Dermatology at Stanford and serves as Residency Program Director and Associate Chair of Education for the Department of Dermatology. She also serves as Assistant Dean of Learner Assessment and Support for Graduate Medical Education.

She has a passion for thinking about how we communicate and how we can leverage relationships to improve how we learn, communicate, and work as a team in an inclusive and supportive environment. She loves thinking about this in the context of developing relationships with patients to help them achieve the best possible outcomes and in the context of helping our clinical teams perform to the best of their abilities. Her recent work has included development of a longitudinal coaching program for dermatology residents with a focus on patient and team communication skills development, the impact of coaching on faculty coaches in dermatology, and research on the long-term impact of longitudinal coaching on resident graduates' approach to learning.

Dr. Bailey graduated magna cum laude from Harvard University and received her medical degree from Columbia University in New York, where she was a member of the Alpha Omega Alpha honor society. She completed her internship in internal medicine at Brigham and Women’s Hospital in Boston, and completed both her residency in dermatology and fellowship in dermatopathology at Stanford University Medical Center. She is board certified in dermatology and dermatopathology by the American Boards of Dermatology/Pathology.

Dr. Bailey's academic interests include graduate medical education, coaching in medical education, global health education and leadership development, and interprofessional team communication.
