Jasmine Mulliken is Journals and Digital Program Manager. Her responsibilities include acquiring and coordinating peer review for multimodal publications in digital humanities and computational social sciences, including evaluating and guiding the technology powering each project to ensure its amenability to current and developing archiving and preservation methods. To guide authors and developers to such objectives, she produces the Press's digital project guidelines and recommendations on platforms, coding standards, and documentation of development and labor contribution. She also coordinates the production workflow, which involves managing the projects' hosting environments, consulting with contracted authors and developers on projects' technical attributes, cataloging and registering projects with identifying metadata, advocating for improvement in classification vocabularies for born-digital work, and working with Stanford University Libraries to identify and establish archiving solutions for each project's unique needs and formats.

As Journals Manager, she oversees onboarding, editor relations, production, and general operations for the Press's journals portfolio.

Jasmine has a background in Digital Literacies and Literatures with a PhD in English from the University of Texas. Prior to coming to SUP, she spent 5 years as an Assistant Professor teaching Literature and Composition at Oklahoma State University.
