Stanford

Meghan Warner

COLLEGE Lecturer

null

Bio

BIO

Meghan is a Civic, Liberal, and Global Education (COLLEGE) Lecturer and a sociologist. She uses qualitative methods to study bodies as sites for the reproduction of gender inequality. More specifically, she studies sexual violence, family formation, and pregnancy and childbirth. Her work can be found in Sociological Perspectives, Contexts, and The Annual Review of Law and Social Science.

In her dissertation, she uses interviews, surveys, and observations to study how women in the SF Bay Area prepare for and experience their first births. This research is supported by grants from the American Sociological Association, the Center for Institutional Courage, the Stanford Ethnography Lab, and the Stanford School of Humanities and Sciences.

ACADEMIC APPOINTMENTS

- Lecturer, Stanford Introductory Studies - Civic, Liberal, and Global Education

LINKS

- My Sociology Profile: https://sociology.stanford.edu/people/meghan-olivia-warner

Publications

PUBLICATIONS

- Not a Victim, Not a Survivor CONTEXTS
  Warner, M.
  2024; 23 (2): 12-17

- Becoming a Survivor? Identity Creation Post-violence SOCIOLOGICAL PERSPECTIVES
  Warner, M.
  2023

- Legal and Political Responses to Campus Sexual Assault ANNUAL REVIEW OF LAW AND SOCIAL SCIENCE, VOL 15
  Dauber, M., Warner, M. O., MacCoun, R. J.
  2019; 15: 311–33