

Stanford

Serena Shah

- Ph.D. Student in History, admitted Autumn 2021
- SU Student - Summer, History Department
- SHI Discussion Leader, Stanford Pre-Collegiate Studies

Bio

BIO

Serena is a PhD candidate in History in the United States field. She is in her fourth year and she works on the history of ideas in the nineteenth century: particularly, how Americans thought about the ancient past as they entered modernity. Her dissertation explores late 19th-century interest in civilizational collapse and the Eastern Mediterranean world during the Late Bronze Age. She is also currently writing a research article on Greek and Roman slave-naming practices and the classicism of American slavery.

EDUCATION AND CERTIFICATIONS

- A.B., Harvard University , Classics and African & African American Studies, Summa Cum Laude and Phi Beta Kappa (2021)