

Arianne Caudal

Postdoctoral Scholar, Cardiovascular Institute

Bio

BIO

Dr. Arianne Caudal is a postdoctoral fellow at the Stanford Cardiovascular Institute with research interests in cardiac metabolism, disease modeling, and drug discovery. Dr. Caudal received her PhD in Biochemistry from the University of Washington, after conducting thesis work on mitochondrial metabolism and protein-protein interactions in the heart.

HONORS AND AWARDS

- Postdoctoral Fellowship, American Heart Association (2022)
- Postdoctoral Seed Grant, Cambridge Isotopes (2022)
- SUMS Training Seed Award, Stanford University (2021)
- Three Minute Thesis People's Choice Award, University of Washington (2021)
- Predoctoral Fellowship, American Heart Association (2020-2022)
- First Place Cover Design Contest, Journal of Molecular and Cellular Cardiology (2020)
- ISHR World Congress Travel Award, International Society for Heart Research (2019)
- Molecular Medicine Graduate Certification, University of Washington (2019)
- Benjamin J. Schultz Graduate Travel Award, University of Washington (2018, 2019)

PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION

- Doctor of Philosophy, University of Washington (2021)
- Bachelor of Science, University of California Santa Barbara (2014)

STANFORD ADVISORS

- Joseph Wu, Postdoctoral Faculty Sponsor