

Marcella A. Anthony

Assistant Director, Diversity Outreach, Recruitment and Engagement, Office of Diversity in Medical Education

Dr. Anthony is a career student development professional with 20 years of experience in orientation and transition, new student, and family programs for first time college students and transfer students. She joined the Office of Diversity in Medical Education in 2010. Her work has included managing and directing summer programs for college students considering careers as physicians, providing advising, networking, and continuing opportunities for pathway program participants from first year to medical school. She has been active in the medical school admissions process, chairing an MD admissions subcommittee at Stanford medicine for several years. She is founder and Director of the Leadership Education for Aspiring Physicians Saturday academy that promotes health equity and health disparities education by supporting premedical and pre-health students in leading community-directed service projects designed to improve community health and wellness. These programs continue to produce physicians, physician assistants, nurses, public health, bioscience and an array of health professionals. Marcella's interest in cultivating a culturally responsive health workforce for vulnerable populations has allowed her to blend student development and health equity through leadership, service, advocacy, and scholarship.
