

Mathew Ayodele

- Ph.D. Student in History, admitted Autumn 2022
- Ph.D. Minor, Feminist, Gender, and Sexuality Studies
- Master of Arts Student in History, admitted Winter 2024

Bio

BIO

Mathew Ayodele is a PhD student in the Department of History at Stanford University. His research interest focuses on the Colonial and Postcolonial Histories of Africa, particularly the religious, gender, and medical history in West Africa. He is primarily interested in interrogating the social history of medicine, medical pluralism, Christian missionaries' interplay, and reproductive health in colonial and postcolonial Nigeria. Mathew is also interested in women's sports history within the context of gender, religion, and media politics in the late 20th century in Nigeria.

EDUCATION AND CERTIFICATIONS

- Master of Arts, University of Ibadan , History (2021)
- Bachelor of Arts, University of Ibadan , History (2018)