Stanford

Adam Langshaw

- Student Manager, Football, Men's Football Program
- Undergraduate, Vice Provost for Undergraduate Education

Bio

BIO

Adam Langshaw is a Stanford undergraduate in the Class of 2029, studying public policy and mathematics with a minor in computer science, on the pre-med track. His work focuses on health policy and medicine. He is a co-author on a study of cystic fibrosis and access to care among immigrant patients, presented at the 2024 North American Cystic Fibrosis Conference. At Stanford, he is Opinions Managing Editor and a Member of the Editorial Board of The Stanford Daily, a Student Manager for Stanford Football, and a Student Fellow in the Hoover Institution Student Fellowship Program, working with Senior Fellow Eric Hanushek. In 2026, he received the Hoover Institution's First-Year Distinguished Essay Award for an essay on the conceptual foundations of universal healthcare. More at adamlangshaw.com.