Bio

BIO

Jennifer Johnson has taught in the Program in Writing and Rhetoric since 2015 and in the Leland Scholars Program since 2016. She currently holds the position of PWR 2 Course Coordinator in PWR. She received a B.A. in Art History with Honors from the University of Maryland at College Park and a M.A. and PhD in Education (Language, Literacy and Culture) from the University of California, Berkeley. Prior to Stanford, Jennifer taught courses in the Linguistics Department and the Graduate School of Education at Berkeley. As a graduate student at Berkeley, she was the recipient of the Berkeley Language Center Research Fellowship, Outstanding Graduate Student Teaching Award and Teaching Effectiveness Award.

Her academic and research areas are applied and anthropological linguistics; the intersections of language, identity and culture; second language writing pedagogy; Deaf Studies and multimodal communication. She has published articles in the L2 Journal and Applied Linguistics and was a guest co-editor on a recent special issue of Composition Forum, "Promoting Social Justice for Multilingual Writers on College Campuses." She is also a co-editor of a forthcoming edited collection, "Building a More Linguistically Just Campus: Pedagogy and Advocacy for Multilingual Writers". As an educator, writer and researcher, Jennifer is committed to critically understanding educational practices in today's classrooms and developing pedagogical practices that center students' linguistic and cultural wealth.

An avid adventure-seeker, Jennifer windsurfs and rock climbs. She lives aboard her boat, Amaterasu.
