Dr Sharon Hung is a board-certified Internal Medicine physician who practices at the Stanford Internal Medicine Clinic in Santa Clara.

She received her MD degree at Northwestern Feinberg School of Medicine and completed her internal medicine residency training at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

Prior to working at Stanford, she was on faculty at the University of Arizona College of Medicine.

Currently, her clinical interests include both preventative medicine as well as managing chronic medical conditions such as diabetes, osteoporosis and steatotic liver disease.

She is the Director of Women's Health for the Primary Care and Population Health department. Under this role, she is the course director of Stanford CME's Women's Health conference, offers group patient visits for counseling on osteoporosis and creates educational resources for primary care providers on various women's health topics.

She is conversational in Spanish and Mandarin.
