CURRENT AND PAST FUNDING

Johnson & Johnson Corporate Foundation (Barry) 7/2000-ongoing

Yale/Stanford Global Health Scholars Program $380,000 annually

The Global Health Program aims to build the capacity of health care at each of its established sites.

Our goal is to establish longstanding Yale/Stanford Johnson & Johnson Health Overseas Partnerships in Education Centers (HOPE Centers) through focusing our scholars and resources at each of the sites. The program seeks to develop partnerships of patient-centered care and models of teaching in low resource settings.

Role: co-PI

Doris Duke Foundation (Barry) 9/1/2010-8/31/2012 (completed)

Web-Based interactive course $65,373/2 years

In "Ethical Challenges Encountered During Short-Term Overseas Training in Biomedical Research and Practice"

The major goal of this project is to develop an open access web-based framework to assist health professional students in exploring ethical issues of practicing medicine or performing research within another culture.

Role: PI

Stanford Global Health Consortium on Innovation, Design, Evaluation and Action (C-IDEA).

The major goal of this project is to create a unique infrastructure at Stanford to accelerate scientific progress in the innovative design of extremely affordable diagnostics, drugs, biologics and devices for global health.

Novel Education Clinical Trainees and Researchers (NECTAR) Program
 The goal of this program is to establish a consortium with the University of Zimbabwe College of Health Sciences and the University of Colorado-Denver to improve medical education in Zimbabwe at the medical student and post graduate levels, coupled with programs to improve faculty training and support and investments in novel educational models and technologies. The ultimate goal is to improve the capacity of UZCHS to meet the healthcare training and research capacity needs of Zimbabwe.
 Role: PI of Stanford sub-award

IR25TW009338-01 (Riley, Barry, Ko, Madhivanan, Co-PI's). 07/01/2012-06/30/2017(completed)

NIH/Fogarty Global Health Fellows and Scholars Research Training
 The main objective of this program is to establish a training program comprised of four institutions – University of California, Berkeley, Yale University, Stanford University and Florida International University (called Consortium)—designed to train postdoctoral fellows and upper division graduate and medical students to launch them into a career in global health research. The program will emphasize training through participation in ongoing projects of long-term researchers of the Consortium at ten sites in low and middle-income countries (LMIC), that revolves around the theme of health problems of informal human settlements known as slums. Through this problem-based, participatory and multidisciplinary training approach, the trainees from the US and LMIC will experience and learn about global health and how to engage themselves in long-term research.
 Role: co-PI

Stanford Hospital and Clinics Award 01/2013-TBD
 $285,750 annually
 To develop a global health initiative for the hospital for residents to experience clinical rotations in supervised overseas sites. Curriculum and seminar series will also be launched.
 Role: PI

Mary Duke Biddle Funding 09/2013-08/2017
 $50,000 annually
 Funding for residents and medical students to improve the health of children in underserved areas

 NIH/Fogarty $300,080 Zimbabwe ICT Project (ZIP) and HIV Research Training

The Zimbabwe ICT Program (ZIP to improve the Information Communication and Technology (ICT) infrastructure and to provide capacity training for a cadre of ICT professionals to sustain and enhance programs within the College of Health Sciences at the University of Zimbabwe (UZCHS) and the Biomedical Research & Training Institute (BRTI). Specific Aim 1.

To improve capacity in health-training related ICT methods to enable the implementation, evaluation and sustainability of new technologies for on-line e-learning. This will be achieved through: In-house training for personnel of the Audio–Visual Training Unit (AVTU), the Research Support Centre (RSC), Institute for Continuing Health Education (ICHE), the Department of Health Professions Education (DHPE) and the Biomedical Research & Training Institute (BRTI).

Geospatial Methodology to Reach Mobile Populations

$100,000

This project uses novel applications of geospatial technologies to develop methods for including mobile groups in health information systems and campaign planning. Combining remote sensing and geospatial analysis, we will design methodology capable of capturing population mobility at a scale that could be integrated with national health campaigns.

The main objective of this program is to establish a training program comprised of four institutions – University of California, Berkeley, Yale University, Stanford University and Florida International University (called Consortium)—designed to train postdoctoral fellows and upper division graduate and medical students to launch them into a career in global health research. The program will emphasize training through participation in ongoing projects of long-term researchers of the Consortium at ten sites in low and middle-income countries (LMIC), that revolves around the theme of health problems of informal human settlements known as slums. Through this problem-based, participatory and multidisciplinary training approach, the trainees from the US and LMIC will experience and learn about global health and how to engage themselves in long-term research.
